INSTITUTES or PRINCIPLES of HEALTH, shewing from Reason and Experience, that Prevention

Prevention is the best Medicine, and in every Man's power, without the assistance or advice of a Physician.

Here follows a short View of the Work.

The Author accuses himself of having formerly slighted these Principles, by which omission he forfeited his Health. He acknowledges the inexpressible Good he afterwards received by observing them. He hath with great application read the most eminent medical Authors, and observes that they contradict one another in essential Points. Very eminent Physicians have founded their Practice on the preventive Principles of Diet and Exercise. Short Histories of great Men who have preserved and lengthened their Lives by Preventives. The ancient Romans used the preventive Practice of Physic before they were unmann'd by Luxury. A short Regimen of Health, also a daily System concerning Diet and Exercise. Of Drink. Of Air. Of Bathing. Of Dress. Of the Passions. Sugar hurtful to the animal Œconomy. Plain Diet produces good Blood and good Complexion. The sublime of Taste to be found in the plainest Diet. Rich Diet dulls the Senses. The Wines of France prejudicial to Health. The Author always appeals to Reason, and hath laid down his Precepts as near as he could to the Test of Nature, that supreme Standard of Truth.

A COURSE of Experiments and Improvements in AGRICULTURE. Revised and recommended by the late Thomas Spring, Esq; Councillor at Law.

The Author of the new Performance intituled “A Course of Experiments and Improvements in AGRICULTURE;” was much pleased to see the beautiful Beginnings of a promising Edifice, arising from Experiments on the real Effects in Nature; and doubted not to see the Experimental Part of Agriculture, open itself by Degrees and flourish on towards Perfection, keeping Company with Natural Philosophy, in making enquiry into the material World by actual experiments. He thought it surprising that Gentlemen are so much wanting to themselves as not to lay hold of every Opportunity of Improvements in Agriculture. The Author threw in his Mite towards perfecting this truly useful and agreeable Part of Knowledge, and has spared no Pains to speak intelligibly of what he delivered concerning the growth of all useful Vegetables, &c. Corn in particular.

Price a British Shilling in blue Paper.

PARDON'S ACCOMPLISHED SCHOOLMASTER. This useful Book having been for some Time past out of Print, several little Booksellers as injudiciously as injuriously have taken Advantage of its scarcity, published Things called "Spelling-books and English Grammars," with new Titles and old Matter, the most material Parts of them being pilfered from the above Book, and thrown at Random throughout their Pieces. A new Edition therefore of the genuine Work is at this Time absolutely necessary. To this Edition is added a Catalogue of more than sixscore Words which Englishmen always pronounce improperly; and which impropriety some People even in Ireland servilely imitate, by which capital Error the sense of Words is confounded, and the young Learner rendered incapable to write correct English.

Flee

To all those who would wish to arrive at Perfection in the English Language.

AS an exact pronunciation gives a grace and gains a favourable attention to what one has to say, it may not be amiss to inform the PUBLIC that PARDON's Accomplished Schoolmaster is calculated not only to answer those purposes, but it is also intended to lessen the multiplicity of Spelling-books (such as Dyce, Dilworth, and Fenning) which have hitherto not only perplexed the teacher, but retarded the progress of the learner, as not any of the authors of those books have made the least efforts to inform the young beginner how to write or speak correctly, but rather swelled their performances to an expensive size with unintelligible jargon, and much confused matter which upon inspection will be found quite foreign to the business of spelling or pronouncing — Mr. PARDON's book is carried on step by step, as well for the use of the child, as for the youth of riper years; being fitted to their different capacities, and adapted likewise to those of greater abilities, who have not time to study the learned languages, but would willingly be acquainted with the beauties of their own. — Note, There is not a spelling-book extant (Pardon's excepted) but at their very entrance, contain a jargon never to be understood; and yet, O shame! are used in some schools; which prejudice is owing to the tyranny of custom that too often shackles our understanding.

✍ A person may be taught the English Language to perfection (without learning Latin) by Mr. Pardon's grammatical instructions in the above work, which may be had by chapmen in quires for five shillings the dozen, or forty shillings the hundred.
